PREPARE FOR TRIAL OF ALMA VAUGHN

Held, With Family Physician, for Her Husband's Death.

KIRKSVILLE, Mo., Nov. 14.-Both the presecution and the defense in the -called Vaughn murder case are busily engaged in completing arrangement the trial, which will take place at the November term of the circuit court which convened today at Lancaster near here. The unusual mystery surounding the murder, if murder there was, and the prominence of all the par ies concerned have combined to attract wide attention to the case, and the notable of is kind that has taken place n Missouri 'n a long time.

Synopsis of Previous Chapters. Synopsis of Previous Chapters.

Hugh Standish, and his friend, Jack Penn, are traveling through Egypt in search of Prof. Keyes, who, Standish thinks, can help him trace his mother's family. They find him, with his daughter, Hope, the guests of a Bedouin Arab tribe, whose Emir, Basraoul, offers to the two young men his hospitality.

Standish is discovered to be the son of the Emir's older sister, and is, in consequence, next in line of succession. To offset the fact of his alien blood the Emir proposes to adopt him as a son and give him his daughter, Feridah, in marriage. The young Shelk Hafiz, who loves Feridah, and who has hitherto ranked as heir to the enirship, treacherously tries to kill him.

Feridah confesses her love to Standish,

Feridah confesses her love to Standish, who is already in love with Hope Keyes. Hope, seeing the two together, misunderstands the situation. Standish is summoned to a council of the tribe to give his final answer to the Emir's offer.

CHAPTER XI.

An Interruption.

HE audience chamber was full when we arrived, but a lane was quickly nade for me as I moved forward to Basraoul's dais.

then know, past all doubt, that my love was all hers—that nothing could part us.

Then my eyes fell on Feridah. She had noted my eager glance at Hope Her broad brow furrowed and a flush came into her olive cheek. She did not seem pleased. I wondered why, but unned my crant attention to the emir. He was speaking in a grave, courteous to the work of the tent was whisper in a far part of the tent, was whisper in a far part of the tent, was whisper in light translating to Jack Penn—the only person present who was unfamiliar with. Arabic—the gist of the speech.

"His coming," the emir was saying as I began to listen, "was a direct omen; the hand of Allah was in it. The emir took the scroll with actual veneration. Touching it to his lips and forehead, he broke the seal, spread out the parchment. and glanced over its contents. Surprise was in his strong face as he read. Then, finishing, he again kissed the scroll and thrust it into his girdle.

"See that this messenger from the Heaven-born is cared for," he ordered burnoose, caftan, and white and gold iurban held by a servant who stood behind him—garments such as only a chief or the son of a chief may wear.

"To sweep away all doubt as to my elder nephew's rights," he resumed, "I ask him this day in open council to take for wife my daughter."

A murmur ran through the audience

As we left the tent, I noticed that the shall be my heaven was a manufacture on the high councilors and shelks will withdraw."

To read the Heaven-born's message to my council will not take long. Then, the high councilors and shelks will withdraw."

To read the Heaven-born's message to my council will not take long. Then, that the council or and shelks will withdraw."

To read the Heaven-born's message to my council will not take long. Then, that the hamber affair. But marriage and all else must wait on the Khalifah's business. Return in a half hour, my nephew."

MOVEMENTS OF VESSELS.

Arrived-Princeton at Panama; Talla-hassee at Hampton Roads; Balley and Stringham at Norfolk, Glacler at Joronado, California, Helena at Shanghai. Sailed-Leonidas from Boston for Hamp-ton Roads,

Then dead silence, broken by a long whistle of amazement as Jack Penn received and digested the news.

Dut it was at Hope that I was looking. Her features were set and expressionless, nor did she glance in my direction. An impatient, almost angry movement from Feridah made me aware that my eyes must have carried a world of appeal to the unrecognizing American girl. Then my look shifted to Hafiz. As though carved from marble he stood. His face was like stone. Yet I saw that the hand laid carelessly on his saber hilt gripped the weapon until his knuckles were white with the strain. Inwardly I admired his splendid self-control.

All faces were now turned upon me

control.

All faces were now turned upon me. For good or for evil, the time to speak had come. In another minute the ealm gaze of the onlookers might well change to glares of fury and a dozen drawn weapons might menace me.

Yet I would speak the truth. I would remain true to the pale, stately girl who now refused even to meet my eye. At the risk of death itself, I would prove to her that I was not faithless. But it cut me to the heart to do what I must do. Feridah loved me—had risked horrible death for me—and now the man she twice had saved must shame her before her father's whole tribe.

I would almost, at that moment, have changed places with the manglest of the scavenger-dogs prowling on the outskirts of the camp. This was worse than my direst fever-nightmare.

"Nephew," prompted Basraoul kindly, as I besitated, "you have had the night for reflection. What is your reply?"
